BOOK SYNOPSIS

Politics in the Playground is a lively account of early childhood education and care in postwar New Zealand. The provision of care and education for young New Zealand children expanded significantly after 1945. Whereas some 2,000 children were attending free kindergartens in 1944, there were 171,138 in early childhood education by 2007, representing about 96% of children between the ages of three and four. For the Maori, early childhood education institutions emerged in the 1960s, but evolved dramatically with the Te Kohanga Reo movement in the 1980s - the comprehensive immersion in Maori language and culture, including the spiritual dimension. The place of children in New Zealand's social history also makes this book a remarkable record of social movements. The postwar search for security, the radicalism of the 1960s and 1970s, the rise of feminism, the role of the State in social issues, increasing employment of women - all have impacted early childhood education. The language of the debate has shifted from social progress in mid-century, to the economic terminology of the 1990s, to some considerations of the young child as a citizen in the 2000s. This revised and expanded edition will interest parents along with policy makers, teachers, and students.
